

Itinerary (2010)

Cycling From QingHai Golmud to Tibet

Physical Grading: 4/5 (strenuous)

Option: customizable to more/less cycling days as required

Synopsis:

QingHai-Tibet (QingZang) route, Highway 109, is one of the 5 main roads into Tibet. QingZang route stretches some 1160km, with an average altitude of 4500m, making it the longest and highest paved road on the world, alongside the remarkable QingHai-Tibet Railway.

You will cycle through major mountain passes of the KunLun mountain, Tanghla mountain (which divides the Qinghai-Tibet border), Nyenchen Tanglha mountain, the salt-rich Qaidam Basin (one of the largest inland basin in China), the vast steppes of KeKeXiLi nature reserve, and the prairie of Wutang grassland. In addition, other highlights include the source of the Yangtze river, sunset at ChuMaEr river and Namtso lake.

The Qinghai-Tibet route is relatively safe and technically easier, compared to the other routes. As such, it is ideal for novice cyclists. To make the trip more manageable, we have designed the trip to be part-cycle & part-vehicle. In doing so, we hope you will enjoy cycling in Tibet!

Accommodation will be a combination of hotels, guesthouses & outdoor camping. Tents will be provided for outdoor camping. A safety-cum-logistics vehicle follows you throughout the journey.
